The use of role-play is a powerful tool in language learning to put yourself into contexts and practise language, in the role-plays you need at least two people to conduct the conversation:

Situations to practise speaking:

Asking your university tutor for permission:

You are a university student who has been through some difficult personal problems lately. Ask your tutor for permission to hand in an assignment two weeks later than the deadline.

Asking for a pay rise at work:

Recently you have made great advances in your job that has seen your productivity sky rocket. Ask your boss for a pay rise.

Asking for directions in the street:

You are in a city for a job interview and you are looking for a specific building where the interview will take place. Ask for directions from a stranger.

Ask for someone to solve an issue with a bill:

You are on the phone to the telephone company because there has been a problem with one of your bills at home and you would like it to be solved.

Job interview:

You are having a job interview and you would like to ask some questions concerning the job. Ask about the job role, salary and any other benefits.
