

ENGLISH | DANIEL KINNEAR | @ www.intercambioidiomasonline.com

Intercambio Idiomasonline

C1 ADVANCED: THE FALKLAND ISLANDS

The Falkland Islands

This group of small and relatively unknown islands _____ (1) be found in the South Atlantic Ocean about 300 miles from the Argentinian coast and roughly 750 miles from Antarctica. The two main islands are called east and west Falkand, with more than 700 hundred smaller islands making _____ (2) the archipelago, totalling 4,700 square miles. Most of _____ (3) is baron grassland that is unusable for farming crops due to the wet weather resulting in boggy unstable ground.

The population of this remote British territory is in the region of 3,400. Mainly living in the capital Port Stanely and other small towns dotted _____ (4) the coast, there are however, a high number of sheep farmers. In fact, it has _____ (5) said that the sheep population outnumberes the humans.

Because of its close proximity to the southern point of the planet, with an almost unthinkable climate, _____ (6) the hardest of wild animals are able to survive. Penguins and Sea Lions have a permanent residence; in addition Killer Whales are regular visitors as the icy waters make the perfect feeding ground. Recently, these fascinating creatures have caught the _____ (7) of wildlife tourists wishing to catch sight of these any many more wild species in one of the few remaining purely natural habitats left _____ (8) earth.

Answers

This group of small and relatively unknown islands can be found in the South Atlantic Ocean about 300 miles from the Argentinian coast roughly 750 miles from Antarctica. The two main islands are called east and west Falkand, with more than 700 hundred smaller islands making up the archipelago, totalling 4,700 square miles. Most of which is baron grassland that is unusable for farming crops due to the wet weather resulting in boggy unstable ground.

The population of this remote British territory is in the region of 3,400. Mainly living in the capital Port Stanely and other small towns dotted around the coast, there are however, a high number of sheep farmers. In fact, it has been said that the sheep population outnumber the humans.

Because of its close proximity to the southern point of the planet, with an almost unthinkable climate, only the hardiest of wild animals are able to survive. Penguins and Sea Lions have a permanent residence; in addition Killer Whales are regular visitors as the icy waters make the perfect feeding ground. Recently, these fascinating creatures have caught the attention of wildlife tourists wishing to catch sight of these any many more wild species in one of the few remaining purely natural habitats left on earth.