

USE OF ENGLISH: OPEN CLOZE

Why are we so obsessed with our possessions?

We live in a capitalist world, _____ (1) consumerist society. Owning new stuff seems to be the _____ (2) objective for just about everyone, the road to happiness. But what do we really get _____ (3) of this? The mere fact that you have a nice house or a fast car only provides a sense of happiness in the short-term. When, _____ (4) fact, we should be focusing on the things that truly make us feel happy like family, friends and experiences. It might be a good idea to take a look at why we seek to own things and how this ownership of possessions has value. There have been many psychological studies that indicate a person values something _____ (5) a much greater degree when it is theirs. If you _____ (6) to offer a child their favourite toy, even if it were old or broken, they would far prefer this toy _____ (7) a new version of the same toy even though it is, in effect, the same object. For some reason they see their things as being more valuable. So why is that? It doesn't really make any sense. Is it more valuable? Well no! But it does hold a sense of value due to it actually belonging _____ (8) that child. We allow our emotions to take over and this gives it an intrinsic value.

Intercambio Idiomas Academy

Why are we so obsessed with our possessions?

We live in a capitalist world, a consumerist society. Owning new stuff seems to be the key objective for just about everyone, the road to happiness. But what do we really get out of this? The mere fact that you have a nice house or a fast car only provides a sense of happiness in the short-term. When, in fact, we should be focusing on the things that truly make us feel happy like family, friends and experiences. It might be a good idea to take a look at why we seek to own things and how this ownership of possessions has value. There have been many psychological studies that indicate a person values something to a much greater degree when it is theirs. If you were to offer a child their favourite toy, even if it were old or broken, they would far prefer this toy to a new version of the same toy even though it is, in effect, the same object. For some reason they see their things as being more valuable. So why is that? It doesn't really make any sense. Is it more valuable? Well no! But it does hold a sense of value due to it actually belonging to that child. We allow our emotions to take over and this gives it an intrinsic value.